IC-Phakic IOL

Phakic intraocular lenses (pIOLs) have evolved from the early attempts to solve the issue of high refractive errors. They have the advantage of correcting refractive errors without touching the cornea with subsequent effects on quality of vision, especially when high refractive errors are treated. Patients who have contraindications to corneal refractive surgery, such as thin corneas or high refractive errors, may benefit from a pIOL. In addition, pIOLs leave the crystalline lens intact, which allows accommodation to occur and potentially decreases risks that may be involved in a refractive lens exchange with removal of the natural crystalline lens. In young patients, it is especially important to preserve natural accommodation. Finally, pIOLs are potentially reversible if complications or problems arise. this course will include 1 phakic iol varios options 2 preoperative diagnostic tests 3 laser refractive procedures vs piol 4 surgical steps 5 complications 6 phakic iol explantation
